

TRISARA
GARDEN HOUSE

AN EXPERIENCE CONCEPT

The Café-to-Retail Journey

Linking three ocean-view salas — Living Room, Lotus Gallery and Little Garden — into one continuous, joyful day.

INTERNAL EXPLORATION DRAFT · MAY 2026 · PREPARED FROM KHUN KITT'S NOTE

THE IDEA

A house in a garden, not a shop in a mall

What if Garden House borrowed the move the great maisons have perfected — a café not as an add-on, but as the warm front door to everything else? You arrive for the pastry and the garden, and leave having fallen in love with the house. Nothing is sold to you; you simply want to belong to it.

A reference and inspiration book for the working teams. Read it for the feeling first, the detail second.

The Opportunity

Garden House is built for exactly this. Three ocean-view salas at Trisara are already connected by open-air garden corridors over waterfalls, koi ponds and tropical planting. With Chef Tao's pastry as the welcome and the garden as the journey, beauty, jewelry, skincare and play can unfold across a single, unhurried day — with Trisara's own signature products as the thread that ties it together.

This book studies how the maisons do it, distills the pattern, and drafts the Garden House version of the experience.

BUILT FOR EVERY GENERATION — GARDEN HOUSE IS MADE FOR FAMILIES, TOGETHER

SECTION 02

How the Maisons Link Café to Retail

Three houses, one move — let delight lead, and let the desire to belong do the selling.

Louis Vuitton's two-floor destination at Gaysorn Amarin sequences four experiences so shopping feels like the natural end of a story, not the point of the visit — a ticketed Visionary Journeys exhibition, a botanical café, the fine-dining room Gaggan at Louis Vuitton, and only then, reached last, the store.

WHAT WE BORROW

Sequence the day so retail comes after delight. Make the café the easiest, happiest first 'yes'.

The four-act journey

THE CUSTOMER JOURNEY · STEP BY STEP

- 01 Arrive in wonder. Step through the tunnel of 96 vintage trunks into the ticketed Visionary Journeys exhibition.
- 02 Wander the rooms. Trunkscape, Origins, Icons, Collaborations build attachment to the house — no product in sight.
- 03 The first 'yes'. Pause at Le Café Louis Vuitton for playful, local treats — indulgence as a low-pressure entry.
- 04 Stay longer. Gaggan's ten-table restaurant turns a visit into an occasion.
- 05 Then, the store. Reached last, with worldwide-exclusive pieces. Retail is the finale, never the entrance.

REFERENCE TWO

Café Dior at the Gold House, Bangkok

A GARDEN CAFÉ THAT SPEAKS FLUENT LOCAL CRAFT — CULTURE FIRST, COMMERCE SECOND

Dior wraps its boutique around a garden café set among Thai vegetation, with walls of flora and fauna hand-crafted in bamboo by Korakot Aromdee. Chef Mauro Colagreco built a sweet menu around the house's eternal symbols — the rose, the bee, La Colle Noire — while nine Thai artists carry the story through the building.

WHAT WE BORROW

Root the café in Thai craft so it feels of this place. Turn Trisara's flowers and animals into edible, collectible form.

REFERENCE TWO · IN DEPTH

Botany on a plate

THE CUSTOMER JOURNEY

- 01 Approach the Gold House. A golden façade — a stop on the Dior odyssey.
- 02 Enter the garden. Bamboo flora hand-woven by Korakot Aromdee.
- 03 Meet the artists. Works by nine Thai artists thread through the house.
- 04 Taste the botany. Colagreco's desserts — the rose, lily of the valley, bee.
- 05 Drift to the boutique. Wrapped around the garden, discovered last.

REFERENCE THREE

Arnaud Donckele & Maxime Frédéric at Louis Vuitton

SAINT-TROPEZ - THE GARDEN-VILLA-BY-THE-SEA MODEL

Closest to Garden House: a heritage building, an open-air courtyard, the Riviera light, the sea a step away.

REFERENCE THREE

Of the three, this most resembles Trisara's traditional, garden, sea-view setting. Set in the courtyard of a heritage building — now the White 1921 hotel — Louis Vuitton's seasonal, open-air restaurant turns dining into the Maison itself: a floral décor, the Monogram flower carried down to the Limoges Constellation tableware and the desserts. Arnaud Donckele's Mediterranean cuisine of sauces and jus meets Maxime Frédéric's seasonal sweets; in 2025 it earned its first Michelin star.

It is also the birthplace of the Louis Vuitton Culinary Community, now extended through Cafés Louis Vuitton in Paris, London, New York, Milan, Tokyo and Bangkok — proof that one garden table can seed a world.

WHAT WE BORROW

Treat the whole of Garden House as one villa-in-a-garden. Keep the pace resort-slow, never mall-fast.

A villa by the sea

THE CUSTOMER JOURNEY · STEP BY STEP

- 01 Arrive at the villa. A heritage courtyard at White 1921 — open-air, the Riviera light, the sea a step away.
- 02 Take your table. Floral décor and the Monogram-flower Constellation tableware in finest Limoges.
- 03 Savour the cuisine. Donckele's Mediterranean dishes of sauces and jus — a first Michelin star in 2025.

- 04 The sweet finale. Maxime Frédéric's seasonal desserts, the Monogram carried to the plate.

- 05 One garden, shared. Store, restaurant and beach connected — dining and shopping at one resort pace.

SECTION 03

The Pattern — Why It Works

Across all three, the same five principles repeat. They become our design rules.

- 01 Hospitality before transaction. The first thing offered is pleasure — a pastry, a garden, a moment — never a product.

 - 02 A journey, not a shop. Guests move through a sequence of spaces; movement itself is part of the experience.

 - 03 Local craft and culture. The place feels rooted — Thai bamboo art, a Provençal garden — never a transplanted template.

 - 04 Edible signatures. House symbols become desserts, so the brand can literally be tasted and remembered.

 - 05 Exclusive-to-here products. There is always something you can only get in this place — turning a visit into an acquisition.

SECTION 04

The Garden House Experience

Three salas become one continuous house-in-a-garden. The corridors carry the guest gently from one to the next — no sales intention, only invitation.

THE THRESHOLD

Arrival through the garden

Guests are received not at a counter but in the garden — waterfall, koi, butterflies and botanical arrangements set a register of calm and wonder. Emotion before product.

LIVING ROOM

The café & social heart

Chef Tao opens the day with a pastry collection built on Trisara's own motifs — lotus, frangipani, the signature flowers and animals. The easiest, happiest first 'yes'.

LOTUS GALLERY

The salon

Pastry in hand, guests drift into the private-shopping salon: high-end jewelry and Trisara's own signature pieces, with La Prairie skincare alongside. Already inside the brand's world, purchasing becomes part of the experience — the LV sequence, in miniature, at resort pace.

HOW THE THREE CONNECT

Delight first (Living Room), discovery second (Lotus Gallery), and family belonging throughout (Little Garden) — all strung along a garden corridor that doubles as the 'shuttle' between spaces. A guest leaves having bought nothing under pressure, yet carrying several pieces of Trisara they chose to keep.

LITTLE GARDEN

The children's house

Linked far more strongly to the garden itself — nature discovery, planting, butterflies and water play — so children are absorbed in the same landscape that connects the adults' journey. While they explore, parents linger.

Trisara Signature Products

The thread that ties the day together — a family of pieces that exist only here, in Trisara's own voice: playful, joyous, rooted in nature.

THE KEEPSAKE

The Trisara charm bracelet

A silver bracelet linking Trisara's signature flowers and animals as collectible charms — the lotus, frangipani, hornbill, sea turtle, elephant. Guests start a bracelet on a first visit and return to add to it.

THE TASTE

Chef Tao's pastry collection

A small, changing set of pastries built on the same motifs — so the bracelet you wear and the dessert you taste tell one story. Exclusive to Garden House, beautifully boxed.

TO EXPLORE

A wider family

Co-created jewelry beside La Prairie; botanical candles, ceramics and textiles made with Thai artisans; and limited local-art editions with Phuket and Thai artists.

A Day at Garden House

A short walk-through of the intended guest journey.

MORNING

A family arrives along the garden corridor; the waterfall slows everyone down. In the Living Room, a lotus-shaped pastry arrives with coffee and wellness tea. Nothing is for sale; everything is for enjoying.

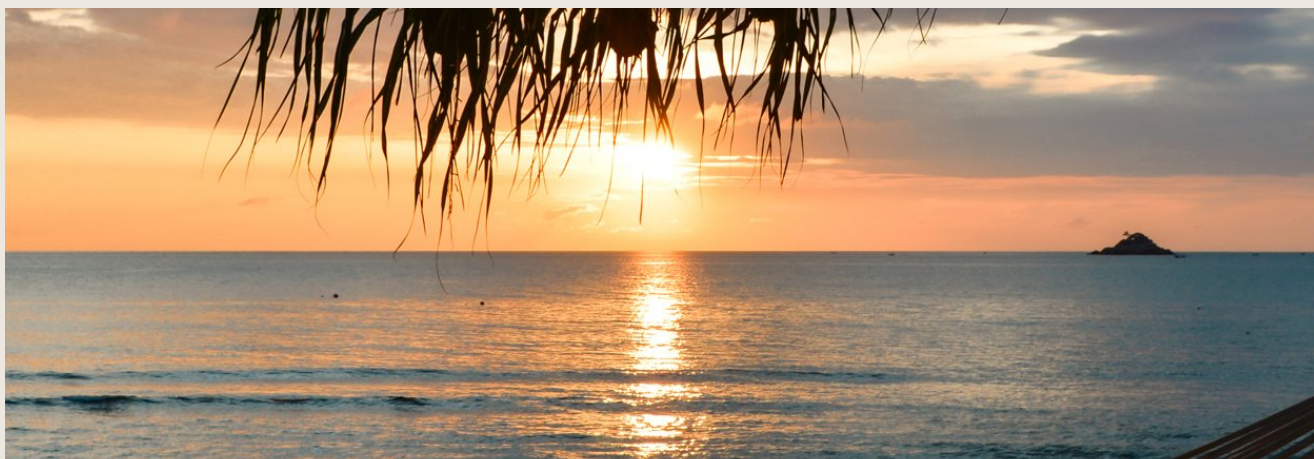

MIDDAY

The children are drawn to Little Garden. Parents wander into Lotus Gallery — a tray of jewelry and a first charm chosen, the frangipani, then a La Prairie ritual and a quiet conversation about skincare and longevity.

AFTERNOON

Tea returns in the Living Room. The bracelet is wrapped beside a small box of Trisara pastries. The family leaves having been sold nothing — yet carrying Trisara with them, and a reason to return for the next charm.

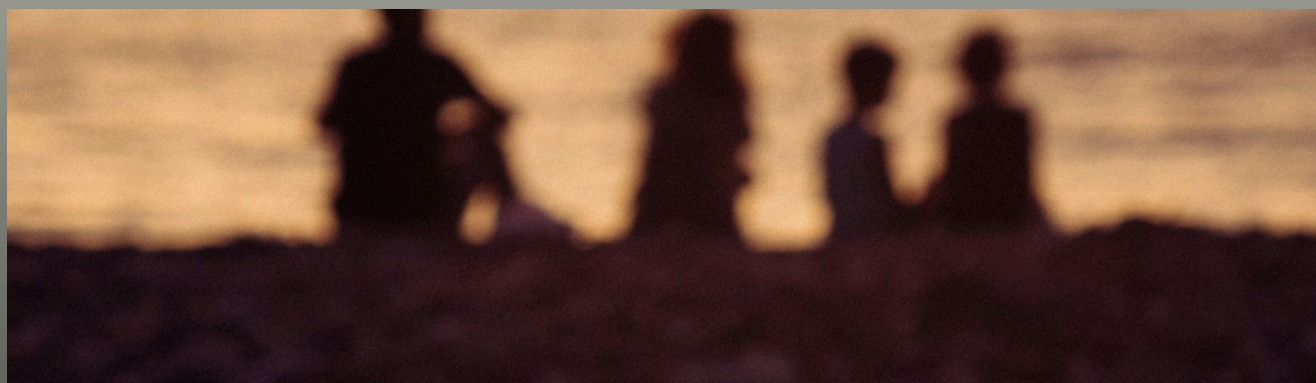

Why This Fits Trisara — & Next Steps

The garden-villa model suits Trisara better than a mall flagship ever could. We already have the heritage salas, the garden, the waterfalls and the Andaman view; a gifted pastry chef in Chef Tao; and a story — nature, family, well-living — worth tasting, wearing and remembering. The maisons prove that when hospitality leads, commerce follows of its own accord.

SUGGESTED NEXT STEPS FOR DISCUSSION

- 01 Confirm the three-space sequence and each sala's role in the day.
- 02 Brief Chef Tao on a Trisara-motif signature pastry collection.
- 03 Develop the charm-bracelet range with a jewelry partner.
- 04 Design the garden corridors as the connective 'journey', with rest points and sensory moments.
- 05 Define the invitation strategy so Lotus Gallery feels like an exclusive salon, not a shop.
